I am applying for this scholarship because the taught year I want is otherwise out of reach on my family's income, and because the work I want to do after it — careful work with public environmental data in India — will not start if I cannot complete the degree.

My undergraduate project on a rainfall series taught me that "cleaning the data" is an ethical job, not only a technical one. I want to get better at that job. The scholarship would cover a part of the tuition; I would meet living costs from savings and a family contribution that we have already discussed.

If I am not awarded the scholarship I will still apply to programmes, but I will have to choose only among those we can fund. I will complete the degree either way if a place and the funds come together. Thank you for considering this application.

A paid essay is written from the student's facts and the scholarship's own questions, not from this sample text.
